Course Description

Model Japan Explanation

Students will be divided into different teams. Each team will represent a different region of Japan. Students will also be given a committee assignment. Each student will also be assigned a political party affiliation. Each team will be responsible for researching their region in order to understand its unique characteristics and view on current issues in Japan. Students will need to continually research their region to understand how current issues specifically impact their region. Students will represent their regions in their committees and work towards achieving their region's goals. Students will also research their political parties.

Typically Japan is divided into eight regions.

1. Hokkaido
2. Tohoku
3. Kanto
4. Chubu
5. Kinki
6. Chugoku
7. Shikoku
8. Kyusyu (includes Okinawa)

The first part of this course is designed to give students a basic understanding of Japan, its constitution and government. Students will then make a presentation on their assigned region. Finally, students will represent their regions and political parties in group discussions as part of a model Japanese assembly.

Each committee will be presented with an issue. The committee will present on the issue. After the committee presentation, students will consider the proposal submitted by the committee. Students should do some independent research on the issue and decide how their respective region would like the issue resolved. Topics that directly impact a particular region will require out of class research.

At the beginning of the class, students will make a short presentation (5 to 10 minutes) about how their region feels about this particular issue and discuss any measures their region has taken to address it. Groups should be prepared to offer counter proposals to those submitted by the committee in charge of the issue. Sometimes a particular region will have a strong opinion. Other times a particular region may not have any opinion at all. Sometimes one's political party affiliation will determine which side of an issue the student will support. After the issue and proposals are thoroughly discussed, students will vote on the various proposals.

Japan Lab

For the first three class session students will focus on learning about Japanese culture and identity. Students will be provided with topics and questions in order to interview their peers so they can learn about Japanese culture directly from Japanese people. Students will also be asked to share about their own culture. Japan lab culminates in joint presentations comparing aspects of Japanese and American culture.

Instruction objectives include:

1. To learn more about and be able to compare one’s own cultural and traditions through comparative inquiries of Japan and Japanese thoughts.

2. To recognize culture as something conditioned by our way of thinking.

3. To gain skills to facilitate inquiry into globalization and its impacts from the perspectives of others.
